

More success at ATG Training

ATG Training is bucking the trend in of the economic downturn. By exceeding its LSC targets for delivering Train to Gain in the Thames Valley, ATG Training has allowed companies to take advantage of government funding to the benefit of their employees.

Client companies in the area recognise that investment in training is one of the main drivers in maintaining competitiveness in a difficult marketplace. Trained and motivated staff are more productive and business owners in the area are keenly aware that high quality staff are the linchpin of driving bottom line stability.

ATG Training's performance comes against a backdrop of many training providers struggling to meet their targets in these challenging times. It is testament to the planning and investment ATG Training has made in infrastructure and technology, which helps its team of assessors, deliver high quality training in the workplace. This minimises the costs to companies as staff are not taken away from the workplace during their time learning new skills.

Commenting on ATG Training's first six months' trading position, Learning and Skills Director Ian Harper said: 'I am delighted that the team of Assessors at ATG Training have been successful at maintaining a high standard of customer service and have delivered more qualifications than anticipated. It is encouraging that companies are willing to invest time training their staff. There is an old adage that is appropriate in these challenging times: Train your staff and they might leave. Don't train your staff and there's a danger they might stay...'
